Comments: I would just like to say how unfortunate it is that money has become so unbelievably important in society that it trumps a way of life. The only goal for this proposal is to make money. It will bring in an astounding number of people to the area which is revenue for Montana but at what cost? The people of the Seeley area have already seen an astronomical increase of people and revenue in recent years due to the popularity of summer hobbies and Covid. It offers a variety of opportunity for hunting, hiking, camping, boating, fishing, snowmobiling, cross country skiing, snowshoeing, and many more. It's a small town area that has small businesses thriving. Building a resort not only brings in more people but it will offset the small businesses. The pricing of the resort will most likely be too expensive for locals to enjoy and will target large money from out of state. What next? Housing developments and a booming town. The seeey area is so well known for its natural attractions. How many animals need to relocate or die and how much federal or state land needs to be developed for this? The local way of life will be threatened. The state has been booming with a population of people brought in from Covid and the show Yellowstone... only to bring their values and beliefs with them. If this passes, pretty soon we will see cities where small towns were and mountains that are suffocated with pollution and stupidity. Keep the area clean and small. Leave the local population to enjoy their homes without bringing in more out of state money. Are people really so money hungry that they destroy a way of life? A community? Wildlife? Is the Forest Service really helping us or trying to destroy us?
