Comments: We are at a breaking point in this modern world, where the once alluring "American Dream" is becoming a ponzi scheme to make baby-boomers even more wealth, as they continue to plunder the last best places; regardless of the grim future it leaves the rest of us." Native Montanans, like myself, are watching (with front row seats), the insidious cancer of capitalism drain the purity and naked grandeur from these lands without any ability to stop this madness. Growth for growth's sake is just cancer. Capitalism is unsustainable, at best. At worst, it is the direct demise of our wild places. Enough is enough. Please stop this madness before the last best place is turned into disneyland. "Everyone knows the price of everything, and the value of nothing."
