Comments: I grew up in Montana when it was easy to access lakes, mountains and rivers. There was more open space than people and while wages were low, the quality of life was high. For decades we believed Montana would always be "The Last Best Place". But then the state became an unfortunate beacon for many people with red values, the pandemic hit and the TV series "Yellowstone" made Montana into the playground for the rich and famous. Now, typical Montanans are struggling to provide a roof over our head, and too many cannot afford to stay here.

I am adamantly opposed to turning any more of this great state into a place for wealthy people to lock the rest of us out. I am not opposed to wealth, or wealth people; however, this proposed is clearly meant to draw more out of state billionaires here's while locking the rest of us out. Gentrification is happening here. It must stop. Holland Lake is accessing to everyone right now. Leave it that way. Do not build this niche resort.
