Comments: The beauty of Montana is the rustic nature and wildness one gets from spending time in nature, away from man-made structures. An increase of structures at Holland Lake takes away that sense of natural beauty. With the campground and existing cabins, it is already a busy location. Increasing the number of cabins is insane. Not only will it have a visual impact, but it has the potential for negative impacts on the wildlife (including threats to the Lunas), watershed, community, and cultural resources. The increase in traffic will add to noise pollution and air pollution. There will need to be an expansion of sewage systems, plus construction of this plus the buildings--all disturbances to wildlife and the surrounding area. Why is this not going to the public?--this is not a minor expansion.
