Comments: There are few quaint historic lodges available to the public in Montana and beyond. People search for this kind of rustic experience. There are plenty of fancy crowded lodges for people to go to in the west. The beauty of Montana with its remote and wild places is what's unique and most important for this kind of experience, especially as we lose more and more historical properties. To create a fancy large lodge on this remote property would sacrifice more than we could ever recover. It would damage the quite wild nature as we know it. Forever. This is a foolish way to make more money. We'd rather see the property kept in tact as a small intimate venue. Safety measures can be made to the existing structures. Raise the prices if need be. People are willing to pay for this kind of remote and wild place with less humans. Making it larger and fancier will only create less of what it is people are searching for. This is MONTANA - The Last Best Place. Let's keep it that way. Please do not take this risk. Wildlife and the beauty of this place will be greatly impacted.
