Comments: Holland lake is a very small precious peaceful lake that my family has been coming to for more than 60 years. We've watched the increase of people using Holland lake over the years and the growing pains have been significant. The access road is narrow and barely accommodates the current traffic so an increase in traffic would be awful. The camp grounds are close to the road and are already noisy and ridiculously dusty from the roads overuse. The hiking trails around the lake and the falls viewing area are taking a lot of damage from the increase in hikers, we don't want even more foot traffic causing the trails to wear out faster and the viewing area to sluff and erode more. Our family used to camp in the group area each year but now we can barely ever reserve it because of the new reservation systems and the increase in demand as more people discover this beautiful lake. This lake is too small to accommodate a tourist resort! It can barely manage the current amount of people discovering it now. A resort will take the rustic peaceful feel away from one of the few escapes left in Montana. Destroying the forest to build a resort would be tragic, and it would ruin the natural views.

We come to this lake to escape the world, we do not want to have the world brought here!
