Comments: I am a landscape and nature photographer who has made it a point to retreat to Holland Lake Lodge in years past. The draw of this rustic little enclave is its simplicity and lack of technology. It's a perfect escape for recharging ones batteries so to speak. The fact that it has so few people is a major draw. The surrounding mountains, crystal clear lake and of course the wildlife make this a paradise for people like me. The proposed development will only serve to line the pockets of a large corporation and bring in throngs of people to trample on this pristine location. The fact that they will destroy so many trees to clear a path for fiberoptic cable and new buildings should outrage anyone who has been to this location. It will also bring in more and more tourists thereby disrupting the lives of those those who live there including the wildlife. This is part of a national forest. Too many wild places are being destroyed by greedy developers without thought about the impact. Don't rush this through. It deserves a closer look before action is taken.
