Comments: This project makes absolutely no ecological, environmental or economic sense. Montanas national forests belong to the public for the public to enjoy for generations. They are not for sale for corporate greed. The dismantling of historic structures and destruction of land for the sake of gentrification and modernization Is all too common in Montana, and it exhausts an already limited and highly treasured resource. This project will cause irreversible harm and drastic change to the land and the lake and will negatively impact the native species that are already vulnerable to human expansion. The Bob Marshall wilderness would not be what it is as a recreational resource and tourism destination with a commercial resort on its doorstep. Short-term profits do not justify permanent impacts on our environment, the main economic driver of Montana. It simply isn't worth it. I vehemently stand against POWDR and all its endeavors, especially this project that seeks to destroy a Montana legacy and monument to what montanans hold dear.
