Comments: This is another for profit company utilizing public land for its own gain. It does not matter what paltry fees the usda collects on the lease or land use fees, the loss of public access, historic esthetics, and impact due to the use of a finite, wealthy groups use, all prioritized above those of public land users is unacceptable.

It's simply another attempt to buy into public land, for virtually nothing, and no real consequence or regard for those who supposedly own it, the American taxpayers, the real public landowners. There's a lot better things the usda can do with the land than turning a quick buck and opening the door to limited access mentality, special use degradation, turning a buck for a limited few- at the cost of those who actually own it.
