Comments: Holland lake is an incredibly special place. It's one of the few corners of the world remaining that hasn't been overrun with overdevelopment special-made for tourists and edging out locals. It's a quiet, peaceful slice of Montana that I strongly believe should remain as is.

Locals and tourists can still enjoy the area to its fullest, without needing a big expanded extra building there and the lasting environmental impacts it would bring. If someone wants a resort, they can go to Big Sky or Whitefish or really a million other places. Preserving areas like Holland Lake is what makes Montana special and what draws people to this state. If we overdevelop every piece of it it just like Colorado, Jackson Hole, etc, then we're going to give up our unique value proposition, and likely lose the allure into the future.

The impetus to preserve these rare spaces like Holland Lake lies in the government's hands, and I truly believe it is complete government misconduct to let greed get in the way of protecting its people and places.
