Comments: I understand wanting to make Montana a place to come, relax, and be in awe of Gods creation. By being from here, I love being able to show others around and tell them about all the unique ways we get to live because it is not over populated or overran by peoples opinions. With that being said, this is just another project amongst a hundreds of others that is slowly twisting Montana into a fantasy. When locals talk about Montana we don't discuss what Bozeman, Missoula, and Whitefish have become. We appreciate some of the things those towns bring, like jobs, experience, and options, but that's not Montana. The more touristy things we allow to be brought into Montana, the less memories we have to make with our loved ones and our future loved ones on what Montana truly is. Take a second to truly look at the world from a non materialistic standpoint. These are just meaningless money makers. It's not what we need, and it shouldn't be what we want. There comes a point where we can only have so much, I hope we realize we are almost to that point before we get to it. It truly is a simple answer. It's forest service land, locals couldn't even do a project this large on it, I have no clue why we would allow others. And I'm guessing not many locals would even be able to enjoy this project once it's complete. I hope you guys take this decision seriously and put the idea of more money aside. Money comes and goes. Montana shouldn't.
