Comments: The world is in disarray, and the future of our water is uncertain. This is not an appropriate time to allow disturbance and construction so near such a precious resource. I have no room to speak if the Holland Lake Lodge wishes to remodel or even rebuild any of their buildings, but expansion into the land we all share is not only unnecessary but indeed too risky.

We are already descending into extreme climate uncertainty. Perhaps Holland Lake seems small compared to other nearby stores of fresh water. Perhaps there is some short-sighted incentive to allow this expansion. I say that any increase of state revenue this proposed expansion would bring is pocket change compared to the true value of clean, drinkable water. In times of extreme unpredictability, a standard impact analysis cannot be sufficient to determine the sustainability of a project of this scale.

Do not allow some developer's dream for more and more money to soil our water supply! Each lake is a precious gem inset in Montana's beautiful countryside. Let the Lodge be happy with its lot, and keep them out of our land!
