Comments: There are few places left like Holland Lake, one that is known and accessed by Montanans, but still very much unspoiled. It is that way because Montanans value unspoiled nature and understand when it's gone, it's gone. We live close enough to resorts in Colorado and Utah to know how much they change things, how much they take away. They are never constructed for locals, but for the rich to come and play.

We should not be fooled by promises of jobs and other economic boons. We should focus on how much will be lost, a bit of the soul of Montana, if Holland Lake is not preserved as it is.
