Comments: I have had the privilege of enjoying Montana's wild beauty over the years while on vacation. The quiet solitude, the non-resort, no fuss, gentle way of life is why attracts people to such a beautiful place. Montana doesn't need a resort in the middle of the woods on a peaceful lake. Updating the existing buildings but keeping them within the same footprint, sure. Things need updating periodically - change is a constant. But leveling structures and vegetation to make way for a much larger hotel and additional buildings will ruin the atmosphere that is Holland Lake Lodge and the surrounding area and take away from its quiet and simple nature. If someone is looking to vacation in luxury with all the amenities in the middle of the woods, they are missing the point of Montana all together. Please do not proceed with the proposal as set forth; consider a smaller scale renovation to enhance not erode the beauty that already exists.
