Comments: Greed is not in the hearts of Montanians but those who would come from outside to exploit the beauty of the land for profits without consideration of the loss and impact to the lands and the people who love it. There are plenty of places where developments and its entertainments are available to tourism, some places need to remain untouched, preserved so that nature as God created it exists without the spoiling of man.

There is no need nor demand nor want for this development other than those in suits with deep pockets. Those who seek and have experienced the land and water as it is, know there is nothing more needed than that provided by nature.

To the investors who have funds to take from others for their own greed, put your money toward things that better humanity not take from it. The world doesn't need more greed, it need grace.
