Comments: I am appalled at what POWDR is proposing for the Holland Lake lease property. Holland Lake is a fine example of an incredibly pristine smaller lake that one can drive to and enjoy. It is, however, a fragile environment that cannot tolerate a large increase of human activity along with the associated traffic and sewage. We enjoy the primitive campground adjacent to this property but I cannot imagine anyone actually wanting a resort property next door. The Holland Lake Lodge (as it is now) is an appropriate size and fits the surroundings. If the lodge needs maintenance it should certainly be allowed but a large increase in structure numbers and size should be out of the question as it clearly alters the type of use. An increase in the size of the development on this fragile property should certainly trigger a full blown environmental impact study. I hope the US Forest Service will see the wisdom in keeping this special place like it is.
