Comments: I have been visiting Holland Lake Lodge and Holland Lake once a year for my entire life. As a local, this mountain hideaway gem has an immense beauty that no other place has. The log cabins and the rich history are just a few things that HLL have to offer. 3 of my siblings have gotten married here and we have returned every year with their children as well. Nostalgia aside, when are we going to start protecting our precious wilderness and ecological systems from land development and further destruction to our climate. The unique landscape and eco systems in that part of the state where it backs up into the Bob Marshall Wilderness would be absolutely destroyed should there be any development. To build something that will become a "pay to play" place will yet again keep pushing out families and people and animals from places that have been a part of history and enjoyment for decades upon decades. Montana is changing rapidly there is no question, but we have to start protecting wilderness and ecosystems and our backyards from becoming a radical land grab that destroys the culture and lifestyles of locals and transplants alike that all live here for the same reasons. Please consider the effect this place will have on Holland Lake and its neighboring ecosystems and the possible domino effect this could have on places like Holland Lake and Holland Lake Lodge. Thank you for your consideration.
