Comments: To whom it may concern, Public land was established as a property for the use of all, to benefit not just the current residents of the US, but for the generations to come. Holland lake has stayed relatively untouched. Land that is cared for, and left undeveloped is priceless. Once changed it is damaged forever. As those that make their living in restoration as well as those that have experienced developed land after it has been marked can testify- the original diversity, the elements that allow us to feel at home in our national forests is marred, possibly damaged beyond repair. It is our job to protect the land not just for us, but for the future generations, the animals, flora, fauna, and for the sake of itself. The land that has the right to be protected. I believe in our right as stake holders in the previous aspects as caretakers of the land to stand before developers who lack consciousness and to help guide them on how the land must be seen, heard and cared for. Holland lake and all those present and future deserve to have you defend its fragile nature and protect it from those that lack the understanding on how to care for our land.
