Comments: Montana and our forests and lakes are not commodities to be bought and sold to the highest bidder. We the people pay taxes and own much of what the state takes as their property to do what they want to line their pockets. A lot of places that were once beautiful attractions are either built up and ugly now or are private lakes and legacy properties that are used by the out-of-state owner for 2 weeks out of the year but we the people of the valley are locked out of our dog walking natural beauty spaces. If you allow this destruction of our sacred lands and forests you are committing an injustice that will have far-reaching consequences for your souls and your children. Please put animals and land people before investors and money-grubbing hands that know nothing of land stewardship and community. It's obvious by actions of the general influx of residents who are willing to litter and destroy our nature because of some entitlement and disconnect from the one thing that brings life. Also...there is not enough skilled work to build this. I work in construction and there is no one to hire here. So what does that mean when this is in construction? Migrant low-paid workforce and stress on material supplies for the state. We are building more than can be environmentally audited and scientifically vetted for the ecosystem and when that collapses in Montana like all the other states in the nation that these people are fleeing to Montana because it is obviously the last best place don't let them ruin it.
