Comments: I am a fourth generation Montanan. As the wisdom of the saying goes, you can take the person out of Montana but you can't take the Montanan out of the person. While some development in certain areas, I would not include Holland Lake as that place. Not every beautiful place needs to live someone's pockets. One of the important charms of Montana's pristine lakes is their lack of development. Being a wealthy person's playground demeans it. Ultimately these types of developments do not bring well-paid positions or ongoing well-paid ones either. Let's preserve the "last best place" vs abuse it. Let the development occur in the current high population areas.

Thanks for the opportunity to speak my mind.
