Comments: I went to Holland Lake Lodge after a backpack trip in the Bob Marshall this summer. We walked in and were told that we couldn't be served unless we were guests of Holland Lake Lodge. That never used to be the case. You could go and eat and have drinks and whatever you wanted and everybody was welcome. They actually have a sign that says that. But walk in the door after backpacking for five nights and guarantee you'll be shown the door. If you're not paying for a room you're not buying any other conveniences at this resort, not at all.? Sounds like the operation wants to regurgitate what the general public wants to hear, while marching on with what they are there for-to make the most money off the wealthiest guests their PR, marketing & lobbyist professionals can conjure. There's no need for them to cater to or provide for local interests. That's simply not where the money is made.

To be clear, this is federal forest service land and this kind of operation does not belong on Holland lake or near the Bob Marshall wilderness complex. How much has to be sacrificed of public lands before the general public is locked out of all of it? A little bite here, a little bite there, that's the method and soon we will be denied even driving by to park at the trail head.
