Comments: I believe that an expansion of this size would be a huge detriment to the grandeur and beauty of Holland lake. There is a large demand for these places in our current day and age because of their scarcity in this world. Adding thirty thousand more user days and a much larger building footprint will affect this amazing place, and not for the better. Access to these spots is currently managed by availability. If this large development goes through it will be managed by corporate greed and their pricing structure. With more access for out of state tourists with the means to afford that. While the local land user and stewards are priced out of the places they grew up visiting. It is a sole sided deal to better one man's business and his now corporate partner. Gone will be the small lakeside campground beside a quaint wooden lodge and cabins. Instead there will be a new fancy lodge that no matter how tastefully done will not have the Forest Service feel on the edge of the Bob Marshall wilderness.

This project requires a much more thorough EIS. Ultimately I believe this project should be denied due to the drastic effects on the surrounding area it will have.
