Comments: Preserving and rehabilitating the existing Holland Lake Lodge structures makes sense, as these structures have historical significance to the area and community. Expanding the lodge in the hope of generating tourism dollars should be met by local citizens with great skepticism. Once this area gets on the national radar as a "destination", all that is special about it will become secondary, and the pressure to develop more of the entire valley will take hold. I would recommend anyone not aware of the current plan to put a gondola up scenic Little Cottonwood Canyon in Utah should take note. The sole purpose of this effort is so that Snowbird (a POWDR affiliate) and Alta can get more tourist dollars by getting more people up the canyon. Don't let the special places of Montana get ruined by the tourism industry.
