Comments: I hope I live to see the day when progress is not defined by development, but by preserving what precious little is left of a world that has been taken for granted.

Who really benefits from this expansion besides the ceo of POWDR and a few other top executives within the corporation? Is a few more low paying jobs worth it? Would you define more buildings and more asphalt as progress in a world that is on the precipice because of too many buildings and asphalt? Too many people putting pressure on what little is left of a semi-intact ecosystem?

Do what you know is right for once. Stand up to money.
