Comments: The Holland Lake proposed project by POWDR does not seem to fit the "Categorical Exclusion" as defined by the Forest Service. "Categorical exclusions are a list of activities which agencies have determined from analysis and experience to not have significant environmental impacts and therefore do not require more detailed environmental analysis. - USDA Forest Service". There needs to be an Environmental Impact Study before this project should even be considered. It's quite concerning that there are already plans in motion before the proper steps are executed. There are many citizens that are concerned about this proposal and for good reason. It looks like money and profits are trumping proper procedure. No one in the community wants this to happen. Listen to the people in the community that you're supposed to represent.
