Comments: Here's an idea: Maybe the Forest Service should consider rescinding the Special Use Permit for the Holland Lake Lodge and buying out the current owner of the structures. The Forest Service could assemble a team of specialists: architects, engineers, historic preservationists, preservation carpenters, archeologists, and volunteers to build/re-build the structures that are onsite, add new ones if necessary, perform upgrades to the sewer, water, roads, and then turn it over to a concessionaire to run/manage? I'm not sure a large corporation should be leading the charge for the redevelopment of this property. I think the Forest Service should look back to the origin of the Special Use Permit for Holland Lake Lodge and see if it still makes sense today.
