Comments: Holland Lake represents some of the last best places in Montana. Recreation on a reasonable scale all ready exists in what appears to be a sustainable way based on the history of the area. We've all seen what can happen to areas like Holland Lake once commercial entities have more control. The areas often loose their original value of being that wild recreational area that originally drew the commercial enterprise in the first place. Once lost, it is difficult for wild and scenic areas to ever recover. Plus, we all ready have plenty of commercially developed areas for better or worse. The special places like Holland Lake should be thought of as rare and endangered places to be stewarded with care and respect for the betterment of future generations to also enjoy.
