Comments: After attending the "meeting" recently at Holland Lake, I was stunned to discover the full extent of the planned alterations for Holland Lake Lodge and the nearby area. I am wondering who thought this was a good idea? What is the hidden agenda? Who will benefit? After the development is finished, what will remain is the fact that a gem of Montana countryside will be ruined by the very people who want to participate in a natural experience. That experience will not be found after this development. What will be there is what can be found in the cities and towns across the world: more people than there is room for, traffic, heat from lack of green space and trees, noise, water and air pollution, scarce wildlife; it will not be an escape to nature but a continuation of life in the city. Yes, we need a place to escape and rest, but not at the cost of losing something that can never be again. I would hope that further study is implemented for the damage cannot be undone.
