Comments: Replacing 200 or so natural trees with manicured lawns (fertilized?), high density habitation and attendant structures and infrastructure, commercial enterprises, a large horse corral, as yet unspecified summer and winter sports activities (with attendant business concessions?), and unnamed long-range plans by no stretch of the imagination represent the developers claims of "improvements" necessary for and perpetuating the "legacy" of this "soulful" place.

Adding insult to injury are the increasing revelations of project contracts in place (and possibly under negotiation?) prior to the Forest Service's notice to the public of the project.

When a multitude of public servants weigh in to decry this project, it's rush job, and it's total disregard for everything sacred to Montanas, it's time for Kurt and Chris and POWDR to cease their underhanded dealings. It would have been so admirable for the gov't paid principals to have admitted their due oricess mistakes early on and perhaps a chan e to regain public trust.

Now, they have no way of saving face and I sincerely hope no way to ever again be in a position of managing public lands.
