Comments: No! No! No! I'm surprised his is even being considered. Holland Lake is a mostly unspoiled natural gem. There is enough development the way it is. It is generally not crowded and peaceful. Further development would spoil the pleasant and peaceful outdoor experience with gobs of people, jet skis, boats, and water skiing. Yuck! Let people go to Seeley Lake for that. Keep Holland quiet. I am surprised this is even being considered. Forest management on federal land is at a standstill due to interference by environmental. It is impossible to cut a tree... but it's ok to invite an out of state profiteering company to completely modify the environment of a watershed? What about the hill trout? What about the grizzly bear? What about the lynx? What will happen to sewage and how will that affect water quality? There is way too much impact and potential negative effects to even consider this. Leave Holland alone. Let this company exploit something else, somewhere else. (I hear there are lots of nice places in California). Hands off Holland.
