Comments: A few years ago while camping on Holland Lake I took my kayak out and paddled early in the morning. I was lucky enough to be able to see two deer on the shoreline very clearly frolicking with each other chasing each other around. This is something I had never seen before. They were free to be themselves and not fearful. Will this also be true when the capacity of the Holland lake lodge is tripled? When more buildings are built? When more people workers and guests travel the area? Please consider doing an environmental impact study.

The lodge is old and doesn't have modern convenience. It may be time to update the lodge but tripling it's size may not be in the best interest of the area environmentally and considering info structure of the area EMS availability ect. Please consider limiting the project size if their has to be a project at all.

Some places should remain as they are and Holland lake lodge might be one of those places. Maybe it's not a lucrative business but the purchaser knew that when it was bought and POWDR was brought in to make it more lucrative. Sounds like privatization of national forest lands.
