Comments: Whenever possible, where the trail is located along a road, it should be relocated away from the road. I prefer the trail be located near the middle of a corridor that is at least a half-mile wide, and ideally wider, so the trail provides a type of wilderness experience. Where the trail is on a concrete or hard surface sidewalk, it is nice if a crushed rock path is next to the concrete so walkers can walk on that rather than concrete, if they so choose (for example, see the trail around Green Lake in Seattle, WA)
