Comments: I am 100% in favor of the lemon gulch a trail proposal. The Ochocos are vast and there is a need for more official trails. In central oregon there are cows which roam around cline butte, horse butte, horse ridge, etc and there are literally never any issues between the cattle and the trail users.

People who are against this are delusional. It's currently about 1.5 hours to drive from bend to lookout mountain area which is a long ways for not many trails to ride. This would allow more people to drive to Prineville which is good for the local economy.

I also very much think we need trails which are steeper, rockier and more rowdy than most CO trails. The terrain at lemon gulch appears to be much more suited for this type of trail which is exciting.

I know from my experience in cota and other trail orgs that these trails will be created sustainably and will not put a burden on the environment. They will be maintained well and they will be a joy to many many people.
