Comments: To whom it may concern,
I want to voice my strict opposition to this proposal, which is entirely counterproductive and myopic in light of the current climate crisis. Much research has clearly shown that forests are the most efficient form of carbon sequestration and this plan to clearcut 10,000 acres will only amount to ecocide and serve as a testament to the continued backwardness of Kentucky's history of 'enlightened' forestry management. This proposal will put numerous communities--already long exploited by the extraction of 'natural resources'--in danger due to destabilized delicate hillside ecosystems and inevitable risk of landslides. I strongly urge you to not continue with this plan.
For our children's children's children,
A. Hollis
