Comments: We are entering into a vital time when we must ask ourselves, "How can we do our part to support life abundance for our children's children's children?" To answer this question we may look to the forests where an abundance of life exists. They are the ones who can teach us how to live in a way that is sustaining for the future generations. I know we as humans hold the creative potential to be accountable stewards of the forest and create abundance within our own lives. Are there people who are bold enough to offer their creative visions? What would the children say about the Jellico Forest Project?
