Comments: As a former Gallatin FS employee, I am saddened to hear how easily the USFS can bend a knee when faced with making a decision that would require them to stand up to bullying. What should be, and once was, shared by all is sure to become just another casualty of the American west and the growing elitist status gobbling up historic areas such as the Crazy Mountains. I really want to have faith in the ability of the USFS to live up to their stewardship responsibilities but in the age of money talks and BS walks I feel like the USFS is trying to take the easiest way out.
