Comments: I have ridden out in the Ochocos the last ten years, and some of my greatest memories came from those mtns and forests. Having lived in Central Oregon my whole life, and ridden amongst cattle/wildlife I have never had an issue. One place which is a prime example is Gray Butte, which has leased to a rancher for grazing over fall/winter months and have never had a run in or altercation. They even allow motorized vehicles out there. I know change isn't fun and most people can be reluctant, but this sort of change will help the dwindling economy of Prineville. Bringing food, activity, and arts to a community like prineville would be groundbreaking.
