Comments: Within the US Forest Service mission documents, one finds comments to the effect that USFS will promote recreation and maintain access. I have followed the story of the access mainly through Kathryn QuannaYahu Kerns' writings on the subject over the past few years. She writes for EMWH, Enhancing Montana' Wildlife and Habitat. The Crazies are a nearby small, but heavily glaciated alpine range. Where access is still available, one can easily reach them from Helena. I have taken my family into the Crazies many times and have climbed some peaks, including Crazy and Big Timber peaks. I very much oppose actions that make some of Montana's attributes, fish, wildlife, exceptional terrain, exclusive to the very wealthy.

I urge you to select Alternative A, no action. Some of the access questions are already solved by previous rights of way etc. and do not need to be re-negotiated.

Sincerely,

Jim Crichton
