Comments: I have hunted, fished and hiked all over central Idaho, including the Frank Church and Selway-Bitterroot Wilderness Areas. I lived in Idaho for many years, and have seen many changes, mostly not for the better. I am opposed to the Stibnite Mine - almost all those old mines in central Idaho are played out and abandoned, leaving shafts, tailings piles, and scrap metal all over the place. How Picturesque!

Anyone who has ever traveled the Magruder Corridor knows it is unsuitable for heavy trucks, and constructing a road capable of carrying mine traffic and heavy equipment through there would require a wide swath of wilderness for its ROW. The whole operation is simply incompatible with wilderness management. It is an either/or choice: wilderness, wildlife and human beings, or money, degraded lands and waters and some fat cat's mine.
