Comments: Every summer I move up to Stanley idaho and start working as a river guide for the summer. As a guide the river itself is an integral part to my livelihood and the main draw for the customers who choose to come rafting. I've seen first hand that as fun and splashy as rapids are, nothing gets people more awestruck by natures beauty more than the pristine serenity of the wild and scenic salmon river. Placing a gold mine in this environment would be an affront to the reason many people come to idaho and recreate. It also devalues the public land that we idahoians recreate on and make our livelihoods off of. Idaho is one of the most pristine environments left not just in the US but the world, don't ruin it with the allure of money from a mining project.
