Comments: My husband and I hike with friends on the current Jackson Mountain dirt roads and trails several times a year. We enjoy the wildflowers in the meadows and along the current single-track trails. Building wide trails would destroy many of the wildflowers.

The recent logging created ugly patches of land which destroyed the natural beauty in many areas. However, the logging company did a fairly good job of cleaning up, so these areas may regenerate in a few years.

My vote is to leave the natural beauty of Jackson Mountain as it is today.
