Comments: I believe it has been far too long since Vermont has done substantial sustainable logging on public lands. Trees are a renewable natural resource designed to grow be used for a myriad of products and allowed to regenerate and harvested again in a sustainable cycle. Our forests and lowland shrubbery provides valuable habitat for many wildlife species whereas big woods provides grubs for bear. Big woods = few birds, rabbits, squirrels, turkey, small fur or feather bearers. There is plenty of forest that is (both Federal and State) not suitable for logging due to various and sundry reasons for sequestration of carbon.
