Comments: It seems to me to be foolish to demolish an old and mature forest. It is a short term decision with a long term negative impact, rather than a long term view of what is important. This is something that cannot be replaced by mere money. The ecological benefits and positive impact of this forest to remain intact, for the land itself as well as the surrounding people and state should be heavily considered. These types of forests are rare and becoming more rare by the day. There is no lack to early successional forests. We need old forests.
