Comments: The Forest Services is required by law to study the full impacts of modifying the public landscape. Just as there would have to be extensive studies on the land to understand the impact of introducing a mine, the same goes for all other modifications. An EIS (or other) needs to be completed by the Forest Service to fully understand the impacts to the landscape. CPW has already studied the impacts of recreation on wildlife on other areas of the state (near Vail as an example) and those trail systems have had a measurable reduction on the wildlife in the area.
