Comments: With the public lands of Colorado being further developed over time, it affects one of the most important resources, our wildlife populations. Not only is Colorado known for it's wildlife populations, but also is a large economic resource, bringing in tons of economic activity to the state. If illegally built trails are encouraged through the implementation of legitimate trails after the illegal trail is found, it will continue to deteriorate the state of our wildlife. This will affect our already declining herd health and will affect the state's economy as well.
