Comments: I sure hope additional areas are not closed to dispersed camping. It is the last thing we need. When an area is closed down to recreation such as dispersed camping, the demand for recreating must be shifted to other available locations. This creates excess traffic to the remaining dispersed camping sites. Then, of course, enhanced erosion or other problems at the remaining sites may be observed. This is used as justification to close those areas down, creating a perpetual positive feedback loop. It's a slippery slope, leading eventually to an extreme deficit in available recreation areas. We need more dispersed camping access, not less!
