Comments: The 2006 Forest Plan states that Stewardship mush enhance wildlife and plant habitats, including those threatened, endangered and rare species. Stewardship should be a mode of ecological and science based forest stewardship.
Why alter and destroy the habitats of known threatened and endangered species such as the pine martin and the long eared bat in order to creat another habitat for other species that won't be viable for another 30 years?
Current science dos not allow for clear cutting of old forests if we are going to mitigate climate catastrophe.
