Comments: I am not alone in expressing my displeasure, fear, and disappointment surrounding the proposed clearing of mature trees here in Vermont. As humanity strives to move the world back towards a sustainable place to live, trees will be essential in sequestering the excess carbon. Trees are life and any project that disturbs the limited amount of forest left is wrong and the worst thing we as a society can do. Not only is this project environmentally detrimental, it also goes counter to all that Vermont is about. Growing up in this state and now attending Middlebury College has allowed me to spend all of my years of life exploring Vermont's forests and growing up in the natural world. There is no economic or technological reason that is worth destroying the necessary beauty of Vermont. The woods are home to people, plants, animals, and not place for new development projects of any sort, even phone related projects. Stand up for what is right and stay out of Vermont's woods.
