Comments: After reading "Finding the Mother Tree" I better understand the health of a forest and importance of connectivity of the forest floor and what lays below the soil. I think it's ironic that the project is called Telephone Gap because that's exactly how the forest works and the roots that connect and talk to other trees. The importance of the fungus and nutrients that take decades to develop and grow. Cutting the trees down is not only a disconnect in the forest but also in science and the community. A much better understanding needs to be done to understand more and not proceed with cutting down the trees. To be progressive in practice and find better solutions to the need for energy and raw materials.
