Comments: stop the logging and cutting! just let the forest mature on its own-we have precious little national forest-it shouldn't be logged like the majority of the state's other forestland- the vast majority of the state is privately owned and for the most part is being cut or logged on a regular basis- thanks to wrongheaded current use requirements- there is no need to practice the same on the national forests- not to mention the climate change challenges- mature forests are carbon sinks- we need that more than anything at this point-also certain wildlife species need and thrive in so called old growth forests- with all the cutting and "management" going on outside of the national forests the last thing we need is more of the same in the national forest- the biggest objection though is to this last century mentality that forests have to/should be logged and managed- how about managing then by leaving them alone? my thoughts ...
